Albertus Supports CICS Program

Students Rally at the Capitol

Fifty Albertus Magnus College students on February 28 joined 18 other private colleges in the state in an effort to convince the Connecticut Legislature to reject proposed funding cuts to the Connecticut Independent College Grant (CICS) need-based program for Connecticut students attending the state's private colleges. The current proposal calls for a 25 percent reduction for the next academic year, a 50 percent cut the following year, and, ultimately, elimination of the program. At Albertus, 92 percent of students in the traditional day program receive some form of financial aid, and 76 percent of them receive CICS funding as part of their financial package. During the 2009-2010 academic year 457 Albertus students received $2.1 million in CICS support. Drastic cuts to the program will mean additional financial burdens for students and their families. Current students receiving CICS grants and alumni who received financial aid while here testified or wrote letters supporting the continuation of an uncut CICS program.
